DDH1's Chairperson Diane Smith-Gander, said "The acquisition of Swick combines two industry leaders to create a world-class mineral driller with a strong balance of surface and underground drilling exposures and a combined fleet of 176 high-quality rigs."

DDH1's Non-Executive Director and Co-Founder Murray Pollock, said "The acquisition of Swick is a transformational transaction growing our customer service opportunity, whilst leveraging common processes and cost base to create long-term value for shareholders. We look forward to integrating Swick with our business to create a company with strong and diversified revenues across both surface and underground drilling. We are also excited about the opportunities and innovation that DDH1 will provide our customers, people, and the broader mining and exploration industry."

Consistent with DDH1's current practice for its existing three business brands – DDH1 Drilling, Ranger Drilling, Strike Drilling – the Swick drilling business will continue to operate as a standalone division to ensure a continuation of their successful branding, unique culture, and customer service focus.

DDH1's operating model ensures each business retains its distinct strong brand, customer service, and management team, whilst ensuring the benefits are realised through growing its customer offering through full whole of mine specialised drilling services and using in-house services to develop a common approach to innovation, manufacturing, maintenance and procurement practices.

Combined with Swick, DDH1 will have 176 drill rigs available to service customers in Australia and selected first-world jurisdictions in North America and Europe, which will make DDH1 the largest mineral driller in Australia.

The acquisition of Swick maintains DDH1's balanced exposure to base and precious metals, with no coal exposure and an expanding focus on inputs to renewable technology.

Following the acquisition of Swick, DDH1 remains focused on maintaining its strong cash flows and low level of gearing to pursue its growth strategy through organic growth and future acquisitions.
