The small dilutive impact of the SPP this year was reflective of stronger markets in December increasing the NTA of the Company above the $1.04 issue price of SPP shares at the time that they were listed on 14 December 2023. Comparatively, in the prior year there was a small accretive impact of the SPP of $0.003.

This difference between pre-tax and post-tax NTA fluctuates as unrealised gains and losses are made on the Company's investments.

Market commentary

The Australian market was up 13.6%⁷ over the past year as inflation receded from its peak levels and the Australian economy continued to hold up in the face of rising interest rates. This resilience came despite per capital GDP falling over the year and a reduction in spending from younger age brackets who were impacted by increases in rent and interest rate repayments. High levels of immigration and higher spending from older age brackets as well as continuing increases in house prices helped support the economy. The Australian cash rate increased marginally to 4.35% over the financial year. Jobs growth has also remained strong in this environment.

During the financial year, the best performing sectors were Information Technology and Financials. Technology (+28.2%) stocks led the charge following the lead of A.I. themed US Technology stocks. Financials stocks also outperformed as bad debts stayed low in the banking industry and investors became increasingly more confident of a soft landing. The worst performing sectors were Consumer Staples and Materials which was held back by falling commodity prices.

The strong divergence in sector performance during the financial year shows the benefit of holding a diversified portfolio that is forward looking rather than investing in stocks with the highest level of historical income.
