Embryo transfer incident at Clayton laboratory

Monash IVF Group Limited (ASX : MVF, the “Company” or “Monash IVF”) advises that an incident at the Clayton laboratory (Incident) occurred on Thursday 5 June where a patient's own embryo was incorrectly transferred to that patient, contrary to the treatment plan which designated the transfer of an embryo of the patient's partner.

Monash IVF has extended its sincere apologies to the affected couple, and we continue to support them.

Monash IVF is conducting an internal investigation into the Incident. It has also extended the scope of the independent review being conducted by Fiona McLeod AO SC in relation to the Brisbane incident (as announced on 10 April 2025), noting that the different incidents occurred some years apart. Monash IVF will provide an update on the findings of the expanded review in due course.

Commencing immediately, Monash IVF will implement interim additional verification processes and patient confirmation safeguards over and above normal practice and electronic witness systems, to ensure patients and clinicians have every confidence in its processes. Whilst industry leading electronic witness systems have and are being rolled out across Monash IVF, there remains instances and circumstances whereby manual witnessing is required.

Monash IVF has disclosed the Incident to the relevant assisted reproductive technology (ART) regulators, namely the Reproductive Technology Accreditation Committee certifying body and Victorian Health Regulator.

In addition, Monash IVF has notified its insurers and expects the Incident to fall within the scope of its insurance coverage.

The update on profit guidance given by Monash IVF on 20 May 2025 remains unchanged.

Monash IVF will keep the ASX informed of any developments, if necessary.
